Depending on the application, the foreground can be represented by gray-level 0, that is, black as for text, and the background by the highest luminance for document paper, that is 255 in 8-bit images, or conversely the foreground by white and the background by black.

Scattered data interpolation methods for electronic imaging systems: a survey. Isaac Amidror Laboratoire de Systèmes Peptides Ecole Polytechnique Fédérale de Lausanne Lausanne, Switzerland. Abstract. Numerous problems in electronic imaging systems involve the need to interpolate from irregularly spaced data.

Exposure techniques that radiographers can use to ensure that digital images are of optimal quality and minimal patient radiation dose differ from those used for film-screen imaging. Because digital imaging technology is relatively new and rapidly changing, radiographers'™ skill levels vary, and resources often are scattered.
